

Dear FCC:I am opposed to the elimination of the morse code requirement for an Amateur Radio License. As a volunteer examiner, I see the majority of people examined who have memorized the question pool, but have no idea what the questions mean.

They have simply learned that if they get a certain question, then they select the appropriate answer (even though they understand neither the question nor the correct answer. Also, I believe that with the ability to pass the 5WPM

CW test either by 25 straight character copy or by the 10 questions that applicants have established a fairly good record of passing. I also believe that a basic understanding of CW is important for emergency communications.

For what it's worth, I'm in favor of keeping the code test and, if not, increasing the question pool and examination questions on the tests in the General and Extra Class examinations.
